Interior designer
Richard Mishaan unveils a family getaway with a cross-cultural beat—and spectacular views of old-town Cartagena

Bougainvillea blossoms cascade across the painted façades of Cartagena's old walled city, adding to the exotic palette of flaking yellow, persimmon, chalky orange, and pomegranate-red. As a child, Richard Mishaan spent his winter holidays in this Spanish colonial port on Colombia's Caribbean coast. "It's an enchanted place," says the interior designer, who grew up in Bogotá and is now based in New York. Returning to Cartagena a few years ago to work on a commercial project, he fell in love with it all over again and was soon looking at real estate. When a 16th-century residence near the center of the historic district caught his eye, he decided to buy it and renovate it as a retreat for himself, his wife, and their two teenage children. →
